Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .upon young plants, etc About fifteen minutes each morning is given to this work, besides what is given in language work and geography.--Jas. W. Hays, Cedar Co. Nature study is taught in every grade of the school and is presented in as natural a manner as is possible--no straining after effect but a quiet search for the truth is made at every exercise. By means of window gardens, aquaria jars, and collections made by the pupils we are enabled to have plenty of the best material. Live animals and growing plants are so interesting to children that when the time comes to tell all they have observed we find the dullest mind brightening and expanding. When the pupils have told all they have observed and have been led by skillful questioning to see more we have them make drawings, write compositions, and read supplementary books on nature. In the library we have a large number of excellent nature study books which treat of plant and animal life from different standpoints. These books are selected for all the grades and end in strong books for the biology class. It would be interesting to go into detail about this work and show how lessons on wheat, stones, corn, etc., are taught, and how language work and geography are strengthened. The main purpose of this work is to create a love for truth and to enhance the pleasure of out-of-door life by a more intimate acquaintance with our surroundings.--B....
